THE TABLE RULE

Adventures in Alba is played by talking together. A grown-up Guide describes a place, then each Adventurer says what their hero tries. The rules stay small so the story can stay big.

Read aloud: “You hear bells under the heather. A fox with silver whiskers bows and waits. What do you do?”

When to roll

Only roll when the answer is exciting. If an idea is safe and simple, it works. If it is tricky, roll one six-sided die.

d6 + stat	What happens
1–3	A wobble: something funny or inconvenient happens.
4–5	A yes, but: success with a tiny cost or choice.
6+	A bright success: the hero does it well.

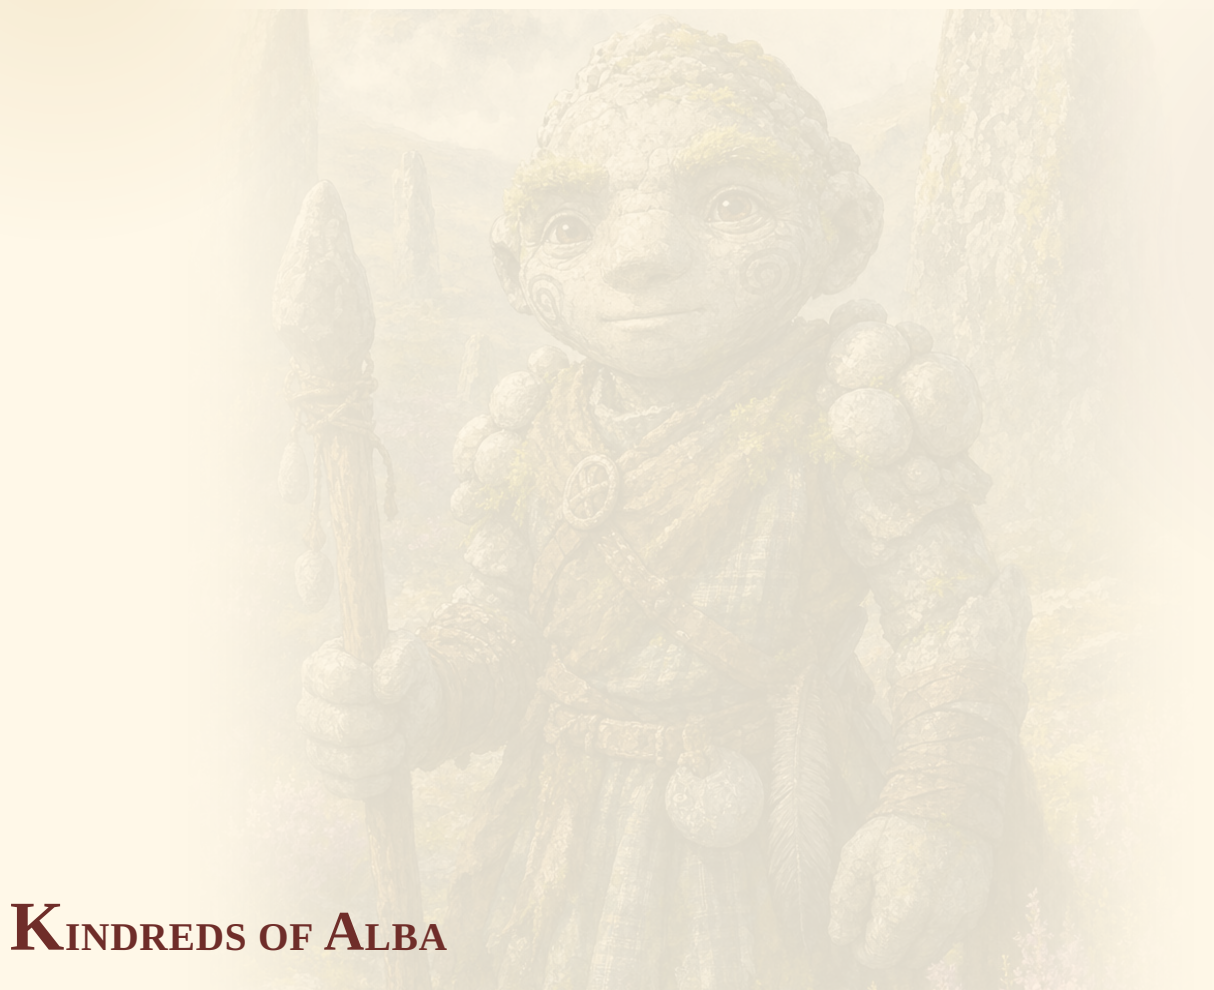

Kindness rule: heroes can be scared, surprised, muddy, or silly, but the story never punishes an Adventurer for trying to help.

The five stats

- Strength for lifting, holding, and protecting.
- Wis for noticing, comforting, and understanding.
- Agility for sneaking, catching, and balancing. Add Int for puzzles and Luck for fairy chances.

CREATURE ENTRY PATTERN

Moon-Kelpie Foal

A young water horse with silver mane and shy eyes. It wants someone to find the bell it lost under the reeds.

At the table	Use this
Wants	Its moon-bell returned.
Helps by	Carrying one hero safely across shallow water.
Complication	It splashes when nervous and soaks the map.

Kind solution: sing softly, offer oats, or ask the loch what it remembers.

Guide note

For this age group, a creature should usually have a feeling before it has a fight. Scared, lonely, proud, sleepy, hungry, confused, or protective gives Adventurers something to respond to.

CHARACTER SHEET STYLE

This sheet is deliberately large, printable, and chunky. A five-year-old should be able to point at each box and explain it.
